How did the Fund perform last year?

The Fund underperformed the Bloomberg US Aggregate Bond Index in 2025. Broad allocation decisions contributed, while security selection in several sectors detracted. The largest positive contributor was the underweight in U.S. Treasuries, supported by overweights in securitized products and government-related securities. Corporate selection also added value, particularly in the Communications and Financial Institutions sectors, helped by avoiding volatile names such as Warner Bros. Discovery and Meta. Agency fixed-rate holdings and non-agency CMBS further aided results.

Key detractors were security selection in government-related securities and U.S. Treasury curve positioning. The portfolio typically overweights the long end while holding shorter-duration government-related securities to keep duration neutral, but the Treasury rally during the Liberation Day sell-off, followed by curve steepening, hurt longer-dated positions. Selection in the Technology sector also detracted due to weakness in a small Oracle position, while esoteric ABS, off-benchmark non-agency MBS, and CLOs weighed on returns.
