How did the Fund perform last year?

The Fund delivered double-digit returns in 2025 through disciplined stock selection and tactical sector shifts, but it trailed the benchmark due to relative security selection, especially in the Information Technology sector. Avoiding certain high-momentum tech names on valuation and risk concerns limited participation in areas with outsized gains. Within IT, software holdings like ServiceNow and Tyler Technologies lagged as investors questioned long-term AI disruption risks. Marvell was volatile on fears of losing a major Amazon chip contract.

In the Consumer Staples sector, McCormick and Colgate faced pressure as consumers traded down, with declines amplified by the market using defensive stocks as a source of funds for AI-related trades. Health Care selection detracted due to Avantor's execution issues, market share losses, and the CEO's resignation in the second quarter.

Conversely, the Consumer Discretionary sector was a strong contributor: Aptiv rebounded on margin improvement, eBay benefited from resilient growth and tariff-resistant reselling trends, and Ulta Beauty gained from sustained demand in beauty products.
